“ I found out today she died. She was my friend...the Best!

We met at Sam's Club while I was working on The Rambler. We kept passing by one another, and started talking. She told me she was into film, so I gave her the production # and they hired her. She was, hands down, my favorite memory of working on that movie. We were treated like crap daily, but Teresa treated me and my crew of 3 like we were important to her. We worked on a short film soon after that. For always saving us when the production gave us impossible demands, we bought her a yin yang soup bowl from World Market, and gave her the nickname St. Teresa.

My heart broke in two today hearing of her passing. I'll never forget her warmth, caring, her brilliance, her ability to solve any problem at a moment's notice, and just how Awesome she was. Even now, I put her picture on my phone to honor the friend she was to me. I loved Teresa, like so many others obviously do. I'll always miss you, Teresa. You're the best! Until I see you on the other side. 🥹

“ I only had the honor of meeting Teresa once, but I was so blessed in doing so. She had a happy spirit, and a kind heart. More than once I was the recipient of some goodies that she backed for Curtis' shop friends. Teresa, you are missed. See you again one day.
